

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Cleveland Public Schools Renews SchoolNet Partnership for Five Years District Uses SchoolNet to Drive Data to Improve Student Performance

February 25, 2008 (New York, NY) - SchoolNet, Inc., the nation's leader in Data-Driven Decision Making for school districts, announced today that the Cleveland Metropolitan School District has renewed its partnership with SchoolNet for five more years. SchoolNet's Instructional Management System (IMS) delivers student data, assessment, and curriculum management to the district's administrators and teachers, who use these tools to provide individualized instruction to over 50,000 students in 130 schools.

"Today we are striving for nothing less than a school district of premier status. The need has never been more urgent," said Dr. Sanders, CEO of the Cleveland Metropolitan School District. "Our need to achieve excellence is based on the skills and experiences required to succeed in a fast-paced, technological global economy. SchoolNet provides the technology platform to support our continuous improvement process. This will be a key component of our future success."

"We are proud to extend our partnership with the Cleveland Public School Systems," said Jonathan D. Harber, SchoolNet CEO and President. "Cleveland has had more turnover and population decreases than most other cities in the US over the past few years. Dr. Sanders, Cleveland's new Superintendent of Schools, has been bold and visionary in his plan of action to bring Cleveland schools back to preeminence. We look forward to supporting his leadership."

Every day parents, teachers, and administrators use SchoolNet to access important student data, enabling district-wide collaborative decision making to improve student performance. SchoolNet's customers educate more than two million students in over 50 cities. SchoolNet's Instructional Management System helps districts manage reporting, curriculum deployment, benchmark assessment, professional development, district wide communication and outreach to parents.
