

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Columbus City Public School System Makes Big Gains in Student Achievement

District Extends Partnership with SchoolNet for Three More Years

February 25, 2008 (New York, NY) — SchoolNet Inc., the nation's leader in Data-Driven Decision Making for school districts, announced today that the Columbus City Public Schools has renewed its partnership with SchoolNet for three more years. The Columbus City Public School district has already made tremendous improvement in student performance since implementing SchoolNet's Instructional Management System (IMS) and plans to expand the use of the tools IMS makes available.

"Since beginning with SchoolNet only three years ago, Columbus has moved off of the state watch list and we have seen our district meet AYP in every category for the 2006-07 school year," said Pete Maneff, High School Curriculum Executive Director of Columbus City Public Schools, Columbus, OH. "SchoolNet's platform is now a foundation that Columbus uses to run its daily business."

"We are proud to extend our partnership with the Columbus Public School Systems," said Jonathan D. Harber, SchoolNet CEO and President. "The achievement gains in Columbus in such a short period are remarkable. We are honored to be associated with such progress."

Every day parents, teachers, and administrators use SchoolNet to access important student data, enabling district-wide collaborative decision making to improve student performance. SchoolNet's customers educate more than two million students in over 50 cities. SchoolNet's Instructional Management System helps districts manage reporting, curriculum deployment, benchmark assessment, professional development, district wide communication and outreach to parents.
